Hustle and Bustle

I have designed a prom dress for someone who is in a wheelchair. Specifically, someone who was diagnosed with Osteogenesis Imperfecta (brittle bone disease) There is no cure but it can be managed with surgery, medication, and a healthy lifestyle. The skirt will go under the blouse so there is no midriff showing. Women who are wheelchair bound are typically insecure about their shoulders and their necklines. I will have a high sweetheart neckline with washable magnet closures to ensure that it is both modest and stylish. There is a sheer layer draped to act as sleeves over the sweetheart that will have lace details to give a feminine touch. The wrap-around skirt will utilize three drawstrings to elevate the skirt for easy bathroom access. This will allow the customer to lay the skirt flat in the chair, sit down, and lay the rest on her lap. The blouse will have magnets on the side so she does not have to worry about reaching for a zipper.
